MARVELOUS EXPANSION FOLLOWS HIGH PRICE OF GOLD ON THE CONTINENT

By J. W. MARCHBANK
(Pioneer in Frontier Mining Work)

On the editor's page of the latest issue of "Gold" the sprightly monthly published in Toronto, we read that gold mining is, perhaps, the baby of all Canadian resources, and a veritable prodigy in early strength and promise. In the special mining news section there is an exceptionally well written account of the record of advance in proven mines since last year. The paragraphs are worth quoting, both from the point of view of style and content. We read:

"Like a fertile prairie responding, under well directed cultivation, with its bounteous harvest of golden grain, the vast expanse of Canada's pre-Cambrian shield is yielding up its hoarded gold at record rates as new gold mills spring up across its broad horizon.

"Never in the history of Canadian gold mining has there been such activity in the exploration for gold and never has exploration responded so favorably. Almost daily some new area springs into prominence or some old and neglected area is revitalized. Under the stimulating influence of $35 gold, properties take on new mine making possibilities. What was waste rock becomes commercial ore and with commercial ore come mills to treat it.

"The story of the construction of new gold mills is not confined to any one province, but it is the same from Nova Scotia to British Columbia. At the beginning of 1933 the total gold mills operating in Canada was thirty-one. From that date to the present time sixty-seven additional mills have started into operation or are under construction. Thus, within the short space of twenty months, the number of actual and potential gold producers has increased over 200 per cent."

From Pack-Sack Pete we learn:
"Saps or crooks never made a mine. And the fellows who know eventually get all the mines."

Oregon is coming along in a mining way, according to latest reports from the state north of us. Citizens are highly interested as they realize huge sums of money will be expended by the mining companies on supplies and for labor. One of the developments attracting attention is that of the Oregon King Mine by the Alaska Juneau Mining Company. The property is near Trout Creek.

Between $50,000 and $100,000 will be spent in work of exploration and, if the development brings to light sufficient gold and silver ore, much more money will be invested in a reduction plant. In early years of the present century a 700 foot shaft was sunk on the property, but there was practically no lateral development. Several small shipments of ore were made to the smelter at Tacoma.

Livingston Wernecke, of the Alaska Juneau, is quoted by the Bend Bulletin as saying that the development program includes the erecting of a hoist-compressor building, steel blacksmith shop, office warehouse building, a complete assay office and necessary fuel oil and water tanks. The Oregon King is only a prospect, according to Wernecke, and its ability to produce gold and silver will not be known until the development work is successful in proving sufficient ore.

Our old friend, Earle W. Knight, managing editor of The Alaska Weekly, points out that with the coming into production of lode mines in all sections of Alaska is coming permanent mining prosperity, and from present indications the peak of lode production will not be attained for another decade or two, but the trend is upward.

Tom Swan Improving

The many friends of Mr. Thomas Swan of Peoria street are happy to hear that he is improving at the Ross Hospital.

Mr. Swan was stricken last week with an acute attack of appendicitis while visiting with his family at Santa Rosa. He was operated on at the hospital, where he was taken immediately after being stricken.

MASS MEETING IN COLMA FOR SCHOOL BONDS

Enthusiastic Crowd Listens Intently To Messages of Prominent Speakers

Colombo Hall in Colma was filled to overflowing, Wednesday evening of this week, to hear about the proposed school bond issue to be voted on by the electors of the Jefferson School District on Friday, October 5.

The meeting was called to order by George R. Augustien, president of the Board of Trustees of the Jefferson School District.

The first number on the program were two songs rendered by the Jefferson School Boys' Glee Club.

Then came an essay on the reason for new schools, delivered in an impressive manner by Miss Alma Armanino.

Now came a short dissertation by Dante Casenti, who likened the old school buildings unto a person who is ill of a disease, saying that the same remedies should be applied in regard to these old buildings as would be applied in the case of illness—namely, first a call for a doctor who would effect a cure by erecting new structures and then a preventive by making them of such nature that all hazards to the safety of the children would be eliminated.

These children are both pupils of the Jefferson School.

Mr. Louis Nava, a member of the Board of School Trustees, was then brought to the front of the platform, and he in turn introduced Mr. Sylvester Andriano, prominent attorney and authority on school matters, who then addressed the meeting.

Realizing that a large portion of the population of that section of the district might, possibly, be more familiar with the Italian language than with the English tongue, the committee in charge had asked Mr. Andriano to address those present in

CONFERENCE FOR COASTSIDE HELD IN PESCADERO

The annual coastside conference of the 17th District, CCPT, held in the Pescadero Union High school on Thursday, September 13, under the extension department of the State congress, began at 10:30 a. m., with Mrs. Roy A. Pratt, third State vice-president as director. Other speakers were Mrs. Charles Ernest and Mrs. L. C. Cullen of Los Angeles, and Mrs. O. H. Spradling of Glendale, all members of the State board, who held classes during the afternoon session. Other State chairmen directing afternoon conferences were Mrs. W. A. Price managing editor of the California Parent-Teacher, and Mrs. F. W. Comba, State radio chairman. The program opened with community singing under the direction of Mrs. J. E. Morrish, district music chairman.

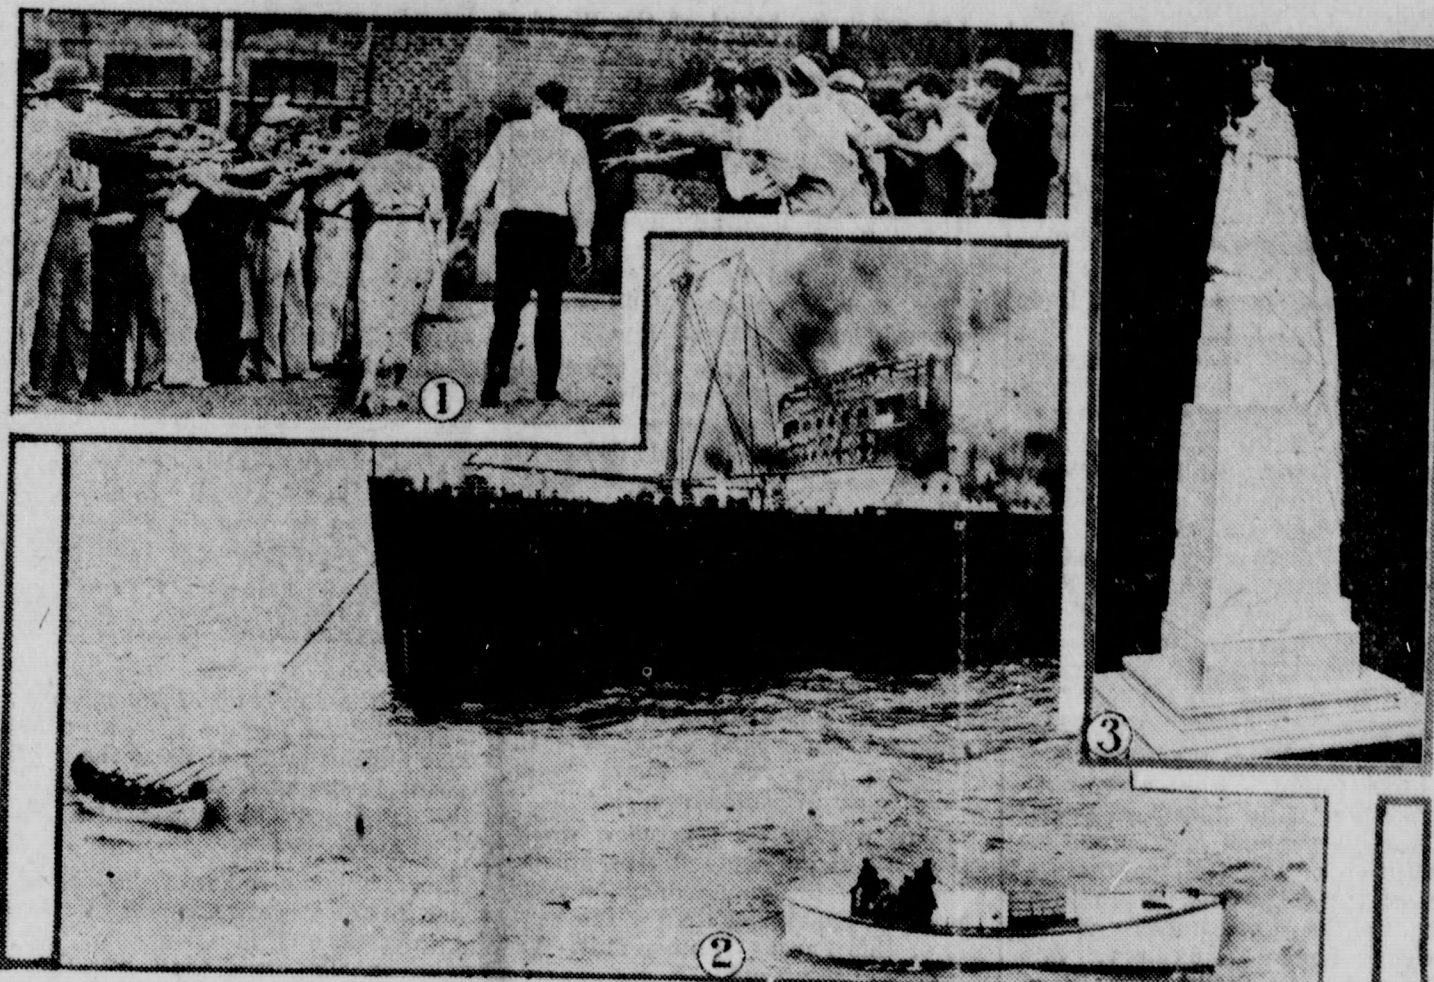

The program, beginning at 10 a. m. and closing at 3 p. m., was as follows: Community singing, reading of Collect; Greetings, Mr. E. F. Willman; presentation of State Director of Extension by Mrs. R. L. Holder, district third vice-president.

Introduction of members of conference; "The Use of the Rural Handbook," Mrs. H. O. Spradling; "Membership," Mrs. Charles Ernest; "The Secondary School Set-up," Mrs. L. C. Cullen; "Radio and the P. T. A.," Mrs. C. W. Comba; "The California Parent Teacher and the National Parent Teacher," Mrs. W. A. Price.

Question box; Round tables with each of the above chairmen in charge of a group.

Assembly. Mrs. John J. Garland, president, closing.

Scenes and Persons in the Current News

C., running the gauntlet of jeering strikers. 2—View of the burning Morro Castle and a lifeboat and coast guard dory being rowed away with survivors of the terrible catastrophe. 3—Model of statue of King George of England which loyal ruling princes of India will erect at New Delhi.

CROCKER P. T. A. LEARNS ABOUT NEW SCHOOLS

Encouraging Message By School Superintendent
Evokes Enthusiasm

Crocker Parent Teacher Association held a very interesting meeting on last Tuesday afternoon in its regular meeting hall in the Pershing School. A number of the mothers of new pupils in the Crocker School were present and several of them joined the unit.

After a short business session, the afternoon was turned over to Mr. R. L. Crane, superintendent of our schools in the Jefferson School District, who spoke at some length on the school bond issue to erect new schools in the district. The old buildings are said to be a fire menace to the children attending them.

The members and friends of the Crocker P. T. A. who heard Mr. Crane speak are greatly enthused over the proposed new school buildings and are doing all in their power to interest every one in this district to help pass the bond issue.

At the close of the meeting refreshments were served, which gave every one an opportunity to become better acquainted.

We hope to have a "bigger and better" meeting next month, the second Tuesday in October.

All mothers are invited to attend.

CHILDREN ENJOY DAY OF PLAY

About 250 children enjoyed a day of play under the supervision of qualified teachers last Saturday, at Gen. Pershing and Jefferson Schools.

There was an interested group of spectators also, and there should be as many or more the coming Saturday. You should know your interest in your own or neighbor's child inspires the supervisors, and makes them know you appreciate their efforts, which are by no means easy at the present time. But if we all give them a boost they will be encouraged to know their efforts are not wasted.

Classes of craft, coloring, volley and base ball will probably start this Saturday under the supervision of Miss Vireno and Miss Crouch, in connection with the supervised play.

We'll be seeing you at the General Pershing or Woodrow Wilson school playgrounds tomorrow.

ANNUAL PICNIC OF MERCHANTS GREAT SUCCESS

Big Crowd! Big Time! Big
Eats! And Lots of Other
Harmonious Things

Last Sunday was a glorious day, and one which will linger in the memory of those who attended the Daly City Merchants' Association picnic at Oak Cove Park. A more pleasant day could not have been selected for such an outing, and thousands of Daly City merchants and their patrons, friends and acquaintances enjoyed themselves to the fullest extent in the balmy sunshine of a September day, such as is known only to Californians.

The spirit of friendliness and good fellowship pervaded the air, and the huge crowd mingled, exchanged courtesies, and renewed acquaintances like the reunion of one large family. It was beautiful to see. It was the general opinion that, of all the picnics, this was the best.

The Eagles' Band played as it never played before, and the music added much to the pleasure of the people. This is fast becoming a great band, and should receive more attention and the hearty support and assistance of the Daly City people. It should be made the official Municipal Band of Daly City.

This spirit of harmony and friendliness should be cultivated in Daly City. It would go a long way if

WESTERN MINING LEADERS IN MEET HERE NEXT WEEK

Will Discuss Matters Vital
For Progress of Industry
Throughout Country

Plans have assumed definite shape for the annual convention of the Western Division of the American Mining Congress, which will convene in San Francisco next week, commencing on Monday, September 24.

Operators, engineers, miners, equipment manufacturers and others vitally interested in the industry have put their shoulders to the wheel in a co-operative effort to assure success of the gathering.

Among the questions which are thought to demand immediate attention is that of the United States Bureau of Mines, around which all mining industries are rallying. Dr. F. A. Thomson, president of the Montana School of Mines, will bring it before the delegates with a discussion of "The benefits to the mining industry of the United States Bureau of Mines experimental stations."

Dr. John Wellington Finch, new director of the bureau, will deliver a paper of importance.

Three round table discussions on imperative problems will be features of the convention.

The first, which will be presided over by Howard I. Young, president of the American Mining Congress, is to be a discussion of the National Labor Board—its personnel functions, authority, real and implied, its effect upon conditions and its good and bad features.

The subjects to be discussed at the second round table gathering will be unemployment insurance and workmen's compensation; congressional proposals; sponsoring of labor organizations, the attitude of the administration and state laws.

The third, and perhaps the most important, will be that of the NRA—its effect on the mining industry, its good and bad points in this connection; shall it be a permanent remedy; what should be kept and what should be discarded.

On Northern Motor Tour

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Lewis of Winchester street and Mrs. Elsie Lewis and son Jackie of Templeton avenue left Thursday of this week for Boise, Idaho. They plan to spend about two weeks in that section, visiting with relatives whom they have not seen for sixteen years or more.

They are making the trip by motor and expect to be absent on the tour about three weeks, traveling north through California and Oregon.

NECESSITY NOW OF NEW ELEMENTARY SCHOOL BUILDINGS

Doubters Invited To Inspect Present Day Old and Obsolete Structures

Vote for the bonds on October 5!
Opportunity is knocking at our door!

We should avail ourselves of the chance to save $25,000 or more while benefitting our school children.

The district will receive the sum of $105,000 from the government in return for a bond issue of $80,000, with interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum on the $80,000 only, the balance of the $105,000 being an outright gift from the government to the school district.

The agitation for new and better schools is constantly going on all over our nation and the entire civilized world. Our own progressive and wide awake community should not lag in its duty in this respect.

The date has been set by the Board of Trustees of the Jefferson School District as Friday, October 5, for balloting on a bond issue for $80,000 for the purpose of securing funds for the erection of a new building for each of the Jefferson, Vista Grande and Crocker Schools in Daly City.

The Jefferson school is forty-three years old, and the Vista Grande and Crocker schools were built nearly twenty-five years ago.

It is proposed that these new buildings be of cement-stucco construction. Pictures of the proposed new buildings, reproduced from the architects' drawings, are printed on the first page of this issue of The Record.

Approval of the proposed bond issue will require the affirmative votes of two thirds of the legal electors of the district, and there is every good reason why this should prevail.

There should be no hesitancy on the part of the residents of the district to cast an affirmative ballot for the proposed bond issue, as the new structures are sorely needed to replace the old schools, which are said by many to be in the fire hazard class.

The old structures have long been obsolete and should be replaced as soon as possible by modern ones.

The bond proposal has the endorsement of practically every prominent leader in the community and also of nearly every civic and fraternal organization.

The youth of today are entitled to proper care while pursuing their efforts in search of education, and they should receive every assistance that can be given. These children constitute our citizenry of tomorrow, and all who have the interests of the community at heart should see to it that the best possible housing is provided

The guests, numbering about 200, from Sacramento to San Diego, enjoyed a big dinner, after which there were wrestling matches, an entertainment and play, drum and bugle competitive drills, dancing, a parade and a ball game.

A tree, brought from the battlefields of France, was planted that day with appropriate ceremonies.

Former Resident Will Wed

An application for a marriage license has been filed in San Francisco by Patrick McNamara, 62, of Palmetto avenue, and Flora Jane MacDonald, 52, of Anza street.

Mrs. MacDonald resided on Rhine street for many years and has a host of friends in Daly City.

TOUGH GUY CAGNEY STUDIES LITERATURE

James Cagney, the tough guy of America's screen who would just as soon kick a goil's teeth out as smack her in the kisser with a grape fruit, is studying literature under the supervision of Lincoln Steffens, the noted novelist. Whenever Jimmy can get away from the studio he journeys post haste to the writers' colony at Carmel by the Sea.

In his latest Warner Bros. picture, "He Was Her Man," now playing at the Daly City Theater, Jimmy is a deep dyed, double crossing villain, although in this picture he doesn't hand out any fistic blows.

CONVENTION OF CALIF. LEAGUE OF MUNICIPALITIES

When the thirty-sixth annual convention of the League of California Municipalities meets at Pasadena next Monday, September 24, the City of Daly City will be represented by Mayor H. H. Smith.

This city is a member of the league, which is the organization of municipal governments in California. The league enrolls more than 200 California cities, and has for its objectives the promotion of efficient and economical local government in municipalities. It represents the municipalities as a group before the State Legislature, and one of its recent accomplishments was the securing for cities of some $2,800,000 annually of gasoline tax funds for use on the city streets.

A number of the state officials are to address the convention, including Governor Frank F. Merriam, A. E. Stockburger, State Director of Finance; Earl Lee Kelly, State Director of Public Works, and Ray Riley, State Controller.

Among the major problems to be discussed during the four day session of the convention are: An Increased Return of Gasoline Tax Funds to Cities; Unemployment Relief; Limitation of Municipal Liability; Return of Public Utility Property to Local Tax Rolls; Recommendations on Local Assessment District Relief.

CAR RUNS AWAY DOES NO DAMAGE

A Market Street Railroad No. 18 car ran away from the switch back at the top of the hill on Wednesday morning at 7 o'clock and came to a stop at San Bruno without a motorman or conductor on the platform.

Motorman John Hershenschir was in charge of the car. Neither he nor Conductor Joe McDevitt were in sight when the car started on its long run.

Officer Joseph Kusher, who was on duty, notified the local police department that a car without a motorman had sideswiped a Ford coupe at Vale and Mission streets. The auto was driven by Herbert Goldstein, who was not injured. The only damage done was the breaking of lights in the street car.

The local police notified the Geneva car barn of the runaway.

AMERICAN LEGION NOTES OF INTEREST

(By L. M. Hill)

Daly City Post No. 410 American Legion will hold installation ceremonies at Legion Hall, 474 San Diego avenue Wednesday, September 26, conducted by the Ritualistic Team of San Mateo Voiture No. 393 40 and 8.

The officers to be installed are Commander Edward Trier; First Vice Commander Cleo Miller; second Vice Commander Harry Anderson; Finance Officer F. Foreman; Chaplain, Manley Chaplain, and Sergeant at Arms, William Reardon.

Other officers are: Historian, O. H. Tallmadge; Service Officer, Felix Chapman; Color Bearers, John Derungs and A. Dominichini; Delegates to County Council, R. L. Crane, Edward Trier and O. H. Tallmadge; Alternates, L. M. Hill, Cleo Miller and Harry Anderson.

Finance Officer Felix Foreman was elected to that office for the fifth consecutive term.

At the last County Council meeting, held in Millbrae, Friday, September 7, Comrade R. L. Crane of Daly City Post No. 410 was elected Commander of the San Mateo Council, Comrade Carl Herman of Burlingame Post No. 163 was elected First Vice Commander, and Philip Blanchard of Menlo Park Post No. 443 was elected Second Vice Commander.

The next County Council meeting will be held in Redwood City, Friday October 5.

Don't forget Daly City Post's first dance of the season, to be held in the Eagles Hall, Saturday, September 29. We assure all who attend, good music and a good time. Dances will be held on the last Saturday night of each month.

John Hanlon Passes

John F. Hanlon of Acton street, superintendent of the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Company building in San Francisco, passed away in the Community Hospital, Saturday morning.

Mr. Hanlon was stricken seriously ill on last Thursday evening and was rushed to the hospital, where he passed away following an emergency operation.

He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Julia Hanlon.

Mr. Hanlon was a member of the Knights of Columbus No. 615 and of the Third Order of St. Francis of St. Anthony's Church and a member of the Confraternity of Mother of Perpetual Help Church, where a mass was said for the repose of his soul, Tuesday morning of this week at 9 o'clock. Interment was in Holy Cross Cemetery.

A Needle Is Not a Stool

Don't try to disprove this statement. While the sewing circle, which meets Wednesday at 1:30 in the Grace Church of the Nazarene, Vista Grande and Santa Barbara, does not particularly need needles, they do need cloth.

The good women of the community gather with willing hands to sew for those in need. They have made over, repaired and made new some garments. But still there is urgent need of materials for shirts and dresses for girls.

In assisting any one the paramount question is their need—not church membership or non-membership.

This circle puts every penny into goods—not a cent goes for salaries, lunches, refreshments for workers, or rents of any kind. One hundred cents of your dollar goes to the purpose for which you give it. And usable cloth is as much appreciated as money.

Donations of cloth or money may be left at 171 Vista Grande avenue or at the office of this paper.

TAKE PART IN HORSE SHOE TOURNAMENT

Mr. and Mrs. F. B. McDermott and children of Templeton avenue, accompanied by William Deltrio of San Francisco, motored to Antioch, Sunday, where they attended and participated in the horse shoe tournament between the Antioch team and the members of the Golden Gate Horse-shoe Club.

William Deltrio is the manager of the team and Mr. McDermott was one of the members of the Golden Gate team.

AUXILIARY NEWS FROM OLD GLORY

On Wednesday evening the ladies of the Auxiliary and Drill Team met at the home of Senior Vice President Collins.

The regular order of business was dispensed with by the drill team and a social evening was spent in honor of our outgoing president, Elsie Ireton. Cards were played, after which delicious refreshments were served by the hostess and her committee. Sister Ireton was presented with a beautiful evening bag by the members.

Friday evening, September 21, the Bi-Centennial Council of Ladies' Auxiliaries will participate in the institution and installation of a new auxiliary to the Mt. View Post. All members are invited to attend the affair.

Department President Margaret Hubbard, who will be present, is departing after the installation for the national convention at Louisville, Ky. The next regular meeting of the Sewing Circle, next Wednesday, will be held at the home of Marie Gaitor on Winchester street.

Don't forget the regular monthly whist given by the Auxiliary. It will be held at Collins, 174 Irvington street, Tuesday, September 25. Come and have a good time.

COUPLE HURT AS CARS IN COLLISION

Mrs. Martha Hill and her husband, Eli Hill, of Castro street received treatment at the Villa Sanitarium for cuts and bruises about the face and hands.

The injuries were suffered as the result of another car colliding with the one in which they were riding. The accident occurred at Mission and School streets last Friday night at 11:30 o'clock.

Arthur L. Filley of Madrid street, driver of the other car, escaped uninjured.

ALIAS SUMMONS No. 23110

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of San Mateo.

William John Meehan, Plaintiff, vs. Mary Meehan, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of San Mateo; and the complaint filed in said County of San Mateo in the office of the Clerk of said Superior Court.

The People of the State of California send greetings to Mary Meehan, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff, in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of San Mateo, and answer the complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Alias Summons, if served within said county, if served elsewhere within thirty days.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to so appear and answer, the plaintiff will take judgment for any money or damages demanded in the complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the complaint.

Witness my hand and the Seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of San Mateo, this 14th day of September, A. D. 1934.

HOME ECONOMIC STUDY VALUABLE

Trains Boys and Girls in Homemaking.

By EDITH M. BARBER

HANDLING the family income presents critical problems every day. In the majority of American homes the division of labor is that the husband earns the money and the wife spends it. Every girl should be given a thorough training in budgeting and buying and boys should be given enough training to be able to appreciate how well their wives are doing the job. This statement was made by Paul Popenoe, director of institute of family relations at the recent meeting of the American Home Economics association. He goes on to say "Housework frequently offers opportunities for co-operating. My observation is that most modern husbands are more than willing to do their full share. In the western United States it is not uncommon to find that the husband knows more about homemaking than does his bride at marriage."

The fact that over two thousand women, most of whom are teachers of homemaking, gathered in New York to discuss their problems, shows that a large number of the girls are getting some instruction in this vital matter. The presence of five high school boys from Ohio who earned the money themselves for the expenses of camping en route to New York and who cooked all their meals under the direction of their home economics teacher, shows that there has been a beginning in this type of education for boys.

When "domestic science," as it was once called, was first put into the schools, the courses covered merely the technicalities of cooking and sewing. Today the "home economics" or "homemaking" departments have a much broader scope. Food and clothing selection from the economic and aesthetic standpoints are stressed.

I think that you will agree with me, however, that instruction in cooking which enables a woman to prepare food in appetizing, and therefore, unattractive ways is still important.

Spanish Cream With Sliced Peaches.

3 cups milk
1½ tablespoons gelatin
½ cup sugar
¼ teaspoon salt
3 eggs, separated
1 teaspoon vanilla

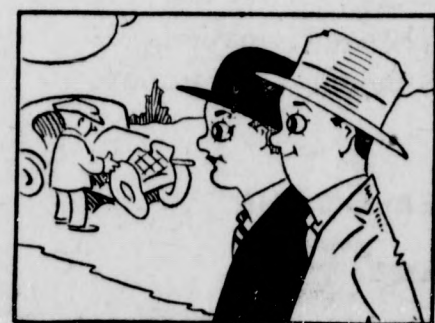

Scald milk with gelatin, add sugar and salt and pour slowly on egg yolks, which have been slightly beaten. Return to double boiler and cook until thickened, stirring constantly. Remove from fire, fold in egg whites which have been beaten stiff, and flavoring. Pour into mold, chill and serve with sliced peaches.

Pineapple Cucumber Salad.

2 tablespoons gelatin
½ cup cold water
2 cups boiling water and pineapple juice
½ cup vinegar
1½ teaspoons salt
1 cucumber
1 tablespoon chopped onion
1 can pineapple.

Soak gelatin in cold water. Add the boiling water and stir until dissolved. Add the vinegar and salt and pour into molds. Set in ice water and when it begins to thicken add the cucumber, which has been cut into dice, and allowed to stand an hour in salted water, the onion, and the pineapple cut into pieces. Chill until set, unmold on

Georgians Experiment in Raising Fishpoles

Savannah, Ga.—An interesting experiment in bamboo growing is being conducted by the United States government on a farm on the outskirts of Savannah. The grove was given to the government some twenty years ago by Barbour Lathrop of Chicago, and was started from Japanese plants. Owing to the growing uses for bamboo, such as for flag poles, radio aerials, furniture, and even proposed paper making, not to mention the use of bamboo as a food delicacy, the grove here of 46 acres, known as an "introduction garden," is arousing wide interest.

Damage to Cow's Tail Is Docked One-Third

Wisconsin Rapids, Wis.—James Pelot, a farmer of the town of Sherry, put in a claim for $10 for the loss of a cow's tail that was bitten off by a dog. The Wood county board claims committee found that the dog bit off only a third of the tail, and so it allowed $3, or approximately a third of the claim.

Lights of New York

By L. L. STEVENSON

Governor's Island, in the news recently because of a survey which may result in it being made an airport and in the news several weeks ago because a lone bandit held up a sentry armed with a rifle and escaped with a military prisoner, ordinarily is a peaceful and routine place. It is the headquarters of the Second army corps area and thus has a major general and his staff along with a regiment of Infantry and 150 or so military prisoners. Polo and golf are played there, despite the limited space and the golf course is probably the only one in the country with government buildings as hazards. Day in and day out, there is little to break the regularity of garrison life. In the past, it was different, however. During the Civil war, there were as many as 1,500 Confederate prisoners quartered there. One made his escape by swimming to the Battery. Prisoners who escape nowadays usually do so by swimming the narrow Buttermilk channel to Brooklyn.

Fort Jay is the official title of the island, which lies almost within the shadows of the skyscrapers of lower Manhattan. The old fort is still there, the earthworks with retaining walls of stone, the moat, saltpore and drawbridge, the beginning of which dates back to the plans of a French engineer in 1795. Then there is a frowning tower of red sandstone known as Castle Williams—the name comes from its builder, Col. Jonathan Williams of the engineer corps—which was erected early in the last century. At the same time, Castle Clinton was built on the Battery. Castle Williams is now a military prison and Castle Clinton is the well-known aquarium. At Castle Williams the old cannon that once were the harbor's protection are still in their places. The harbor protection now, however, is down at Sandy Hook.

While things are peaceful at Fort Jay now, back in the old days there was more excitement than a bandit taking away a prisoner. For instance, once its garrison moved out in a hurry. The reason was 50 warships and 200 transports commanded by General Howe and his brother, the admiral, had come into the harbor in search of a rebel. The rebel's name was George Washington. The result is recorded in history.

Annals of Governor's Island include this grim order issued in 1814 when this country was again at grips with England: "The troops on Governor's Island will parade on the grand parade for the purpose of witnessing the execution of the prisoner sentenced by a general court-martial of the second instant to be shot to death. . . . The execution party, preceded by the music, with the provost marshal at their head, will march in front of the prisoner, the music playing the Dead March."

Attempts to have Governor's Island turned into an airport have been going on for years. Mayor LaGuardia has expedited the plans and the survey recently ordered seems to be a beginning toward that end. Governor's Island is about five minutes from the Battery and about fifteen minutes from the financial district. Air mails now arrive at and depart from the Newark airport.

During the first campaign against street begging conducted by the city welfare department, 1,663 persons were arrested. Seven hundred and forty-six received penal sentences as chronic offenders. Forty-five per cent were started on the road to rehabilitation through health and welfare agencies. But the number seems as great as it was at the beginning of the campaign.

HOW IT STARTED

By JEAN NEWTON

Not Worth a "Rap"

IF WE stop to think about it at all, we should probably attribute the origin of the phrase "Not worth a rap," or "Don't care a rap," to the "rap" which is a quick knock or light blow.

But this phrase has a different story, one which illuminates in the telling an obscure page in the history of coins.

For the "rap" from which this saying is derived was the popular name for the various tokens that passed current for a half-penny in Ireland in the early part of the Eighteenth century. The word was generally used for any coin of trifling value, and many references to it can be found in English literature. For instance, Swift said: "Many counterfeits passed about under the name of raps."

Pennsylvania Police Will Make Own Bullets

West Chester, Pa.—Police of West Chester are going to "roll their own" bullets.

Preparations are under way among members of the local force to manufacture their own ammunition. A small bullet mold, together with the necessary devices for decapping, capping and loading brass cartridge shells, will be installed in the basement of police headquarters.

This method will decrease greatly the cost of ammunition, according to Police Chief Darlington. The practice of making their own ammunition is rather common among police units of this part of the state.

TRUE DETECTIVE STORY

by Vance Wynn © Public Ledger

The Case of Hannah Brown

THIS is a tragedy which began with the finding of the trunk of a body in Paddington, London, on the day after Christmas, 1836.

That ghastly thing meant nothing, and in those days there was no organized or specialized police force to run down crime.

Constable Haines went on the job, however, with all of the enthusiasm characteristic of a Nineteenth-century Sherlock Holmes.

On the following day he found a human head in the Regent's canal. Next a pair of legs were discovered and finally two arms.

All of these parts, it was found, belonged to the same person, and that person a woman.

The head was placed in alcohol, in a glass case, for purposes of identification.

It had been on exhibition for many weeks when a workman named John Gay strolled into the impromptu morgue.

His sister, Hannah Brown, had disappeared the day before Christmas, and had not been seen since.

This typical cockney took a look at the head preserved in alcohol, and then exclaimed, with true lower-class British stolidity:

"Well, I'm blowed if it ain't Hannah!"

Constable Haines then busied himself in running down the life story of Hannah Brown.

He found a man named Harry Davis who recalled the woman.

Davis said Hannah had called on him on the day before Christmas and told him that she was engaged to marry James Greenacre, who lived near Kensington.

That was a good enough clew for Haines.

He started for that neighborhood at once, and eventually located Greenacre on the Surrey side of the Thames in the parish of Camberwell.

He was living with a woman named Sarah Gale, who had a young daughter. Greenacre stoutly denied any knowledge of Hannah Brown.

He said he had never met the woman, much less promised to marry her.

But while Haines was talking to Greenacre he noticed a significant glance pass between the suspect and the woman.

He saw something else. It was a dress the child was wearing.

The material of which this was made corresponded with the stuff they had found wrapped around the trunk of Hannah Brown when it was discovered in Paddington.

Being a very conscientious as well as a very direct person, Constable Haines arrested James Greenacre and Sarah Gale, and left the matter of their guilt to be decided by the coroner's inquest.

The coroner turned the case over to the court and the trial took place in the Old Bailey, adjoining the annex to Newgate prison.

It is interesting to note that Chief Justice Coleridge presided.

A witness appeared who testified that he had seen Greenacre going into the house of Sarah Gale with a woman on the day before Christmas.

This woman was tall and in every particular resembled Hannah Brown.

He also swore that some time afterward Greenacre left the house carrying a bulky and heavy bundle in a large, blue merino bag.

Two other witnesses testified that they had heard a quarrel going on in the house during the time Hannah Brown was there.

There was a scuffling and much noise, and finally a sound of some one dropping to the floor.

It was proved that Sarah Gale was seen scrubbing the floor immediately after Greenacre left, and detectives completed the capstone of evidence by testifying that brimstone had been used in the house for the purpose of fumigation.

Two motives were assigned for the crime.

First, jealousy on the part of Sarah Gale, and secondly, robbery, because Hannah Brown had not only been killed but robbed.

The jury convicted Greenacre, and before he was executed he confessed his guilt.

There was doubt about Sarah Gale, and she was merely transported for life.

"Myrrh"

"Myrrh" is a perennial branching herb some two feet in height with finely divided pubescent leaves and small white flowers arranged in umbels. The fruit is like a large caraway seed about an inch long; smooth but strongly ribbed. The fruit and other parts of the plant have a sweet aromatic odor that has given it the name "Myrrh." It is not the true myrrh of perfumes which is the gum of a tropical tree, Balsamedendron myrrha.

Finland Wet Land

Finland lies between continental Russia and peninsular Scandinavia. The land is not considered rich from the agricultural standpoint, 60 to 65 per cent of it being wet, poorly drained land, lakes and peat bogs. It was through the wet land that the French name, Suomi, meaning swamp, was applied to the country. It has been adopted as a national name by the Finns.

Racketeers Have No Place In Our Racing

By J. W. MARCHBANK

To keep racing from becoming a racket, a danger ever present when promoters invade any promising field, special emphasis must be placed on breeding. Some time ago, a well known racing official tried to put up an argument that it did not matter where the horses came from just so the sport was conducted in a "clean" manner. After a little development of the thought that only home bred horses stirred up real interest among the home folk, the official capitulated.

"You're right, we must have breeding farms up and down the state to furnish the runners for our meetings. I'll never argue on the other side again," was his parting remark.

Unfortunately, slow progress is being made in the breeding of thoroughbreds in the state. Not so many years ago the industry was one of the leading ones of the commonwealth and California bred gallopers were winning great races in various parts of the world.

Have times changed so completely that the industry cannot be revived?

Times have changed, I'll admit, but that is as far as I'll go. The industry can be brought back, but on a different scale from other years. There will never be a Haggin nursery with more than a score of noted stallions and hundreds of mares. That is long past and gone. What is coming is a gradual awakening of interest in the blood horse among people of means, and especially among farmers.

As material help in encouraging production of high class colts and fillies, my notion of a State Breeding Bureau must be carried to fruition. Hundreds of citizens can afford to maintain one or more brood mares. Owning a stock horse is another proposition altogether. It is up to the state, which is getting revenue from racing, to furnish stallions for the proper nicks. In the years to come, racing and breeding will prosper, simply because of foresight shown in these early times.

MINING NOTES OF VARIOUS SECTIONS

Workmen have begun the erection of a ten foot heavy wire fence which will encircle the surface workings of the Idaho-Maryland mine near Grass Valley. The posts are of heavy steel set in concrete and topped with three strands of barbed wire. Gates will be placed at the several entrances to the property. It is reported guards will be placed at the entrances and no one but employees and persons on business will be admitted. The Idaho-Maryland Company recently purchased two submarine guns.

Development work below The Narrows on the Yuba River at Smartsville is expected to start within the next thirty days by the Mammoth Gold Dredging and Mining Company. B. M. Sites is in charge of the work. Machinery and mining equipment are being received on the property. The officers of the company are: P. J. Williams, Joseph Brass and E. F. Smith.

The Berlin and Ione districts, among the oldest gold producers of Nevada, are displaying new life as a result of the worldwide demand for the yellow metal. Shipments are going from several properties, old producers are being reopened, and new mills are in course of erection. A compressor and other equipment have been placed on the old Richmond mine near Berlin, a camp established and reopening of old workings speeded. A carload of rich ore is ready for shipment. At the Pappas property, north of Ione, building of a stamp mill and cyanide plant has begun. Leasers are shipping from the old Shamrock and other nearby properties.

The famous old Parrot gold mine in Lundy Canyon has been taken under option by the Big Bear Mining Company, following extensive sampling of the ore bodies. The property embraces thirteen claims and mill site and adjoins the May Lundy mine, a famous producer many years ago. Large bodies of commercial ore are said to be exposed, and extensive operations are projected.

William Christian found a piece of mineral in a quartz vein in the Smith's flat section that is puzzling miners of the district. It is an inch long, three quarters of an inch wide and about a half inch thick and has the appearance of a fine grade of coal. So far as known, coal never has been found in that section.

Rehabilitation of the Phoenix mine, on the Auburn highway below Grass Valley has started under the supervision of T. S. Davey. A new head frame and surface buildings are being erected and development work is scheduled to begin this month. The present shaft is down to a depth of 600 feet and a raise on the incline will be brought to the surface for a second entrance.

The Salmon River Mines Company reports the vein has been contacted in the lower tunnel. It is over three feet wide at the point of intersection. It has well defined walls and is of the same formation as in the workings in the upper tunnel, which has a four foot vein of high values. E. E. (Deacon) Van Buren, vice president of the company, formerly was the manager and an outfielder of the Sacramento baseball club.

The Trinity Consolidated Mines Company is completing preparations for extensive operations of its placer properties at Trinity Center when the rainy season sets in. Testing of the deposits by engineers is credited with indicating over 70,000,000 cubic yards of commercial gravel. The property covers 1400 acres and is equipped with twelve miles of ditches, 7000 feet of pipe line and four hydraulic giants. The company also owns and operates the Monarch mine near Sierra City, Sierra County.

CARIBOO SHOWS NEW CONFIDENCE NOW INCREASING

Construction Commenced of Mills in Various Parts Of the District

Persistent news from Cariboo indicates that the whole district is permeated with a feeling of confidence and optimism such as it has not enjoyed since the early days of "hurray" not even during the recent period of activity.

While the situation is quieter on the surface, there is an underlying belief that the district is now safely "over the hump," with a downhill pull and actual lode-mining results to grease the way.

Much of this recrudescence of optimism has been caused by commencement of construction of the Island Mountain mill by Newmont Mining Corporation, one of the most important operating companies in the United States.

It is argued that the move indicates the faith of some of the best engineers on the continent in the outcome of the Island Mountain property in particular and the Cariboo area in general.

For several months construction hung fire and that fact largely accounted for the decline in optimism apparent up till a few weeks ago.

Now, construction is being rushed with all possible speed and it is believed that the plant will be in operation this month. With the first brick expected the following month, it is argued that conclusive proof of the district's riches will be offered to the doubting part of the mining world, says Sidney Norman in the Vancouver Sun.

Cariboo Quartz Mill

Cariboo Gold Quartz, too, is stepping up milling facilities and, for the first time, is devoting much of its efforts to stoping in the great length of veins already opened up.

It will be necessary to suspend milling operations for a short time while the changes are made and the management intends to have a large reserve ready for resumption of operations, with consequent increase in production in nearby months.

Quite irrespective of stock prices, there is reason to suggest that the company is entitled to far more public consideration than it has received in recent past.

While in the heat of excitement months ago, some over-enthusiastic statements, more or less official, may have been made, Cariboo Gold Quartz was not the only local issue so affected and there are but few that can show an earning power, in the development stages, of around $300,000 per annum.

It has been a tough job to bring the mine to its present condition and, now that milling duty is to be increased, there is real reason for congratulation.

Stoping has hitherto been carried on only to a very small extent, the mill supply coming very largely from development. With stoping under way generally, there ought to be an increase in mill heads' values and quantity.

Placer Season Good

Placer and hydraulic miners have enjoyed one of the best seasons in many years, with several building new ditches that will result in largely increased operations in the future.

Ford and McDougall have recently completed a clean-up on Dragon Creek and recovered 250 ounces of gold in addition to about 30 ounces of nuggets picked up on bedrock.

An important placer discovery has recently been made on Baker Creek, almost opposite Quesnel, and it is still occupying the attention of local men, with an excellent chance of developing into a commercially profitable venture.

Baker Creek is a tributary of the

CLEAN HEAT

WHEN Natural Gas heat comes in, dirt and dust and grime that is ever present with old fashioned fire-tending or smoky fuel goes out—forever. For Natural Gas is delivered clean, burns clean and leaves no residue to be gathered up and hauled away.

What a change too, this modern fuel brings throughout the house! Curtains, laundered clean and crisp, stay clean. Wall paper, ceilings, floors and rugs keep looking like new—years longer. There is no grimy dust settling into furniture and upon window ledges. Think of what all this means when both labor and worry of housework are lightened—made so much easier.

Save hours of needless work keeping fires up this winter. Change your basement or storeroom into a playroom or clothes-drying room this winter. Save money too in redecorating costs, renovating costs, rug cleaning bills, by changing to Natural Gas heating.

Why not make the change to modern, clean heat in your home this month—right now!

EMILY'S LIZARD

By R. H. WILKINSON
© Bell Syndicate.—WNU Service.

MRS. EMILY METCALF is a gushy sort of person. She also coos very well. Last month I met her on Tremont street.

I say "met." Perhaps I should say "ambushed."

Having observed her when some distance away I shamelessly stepped into a doorway to avoid meeting her.

Unfortunately the door was locked, and whereas I suddenly became intensely interested in the vague printing on its soiled glass, I was trapped. Mrs. Metcalf espied me.

I should have known better than to attempt escaping her.

"How do you do! My dear, it's ages—ages since I've seen you. You've grown thinner? I do think you have. And younger looking. Much. . . . Such a becoming tie! . . . Now, if I were a bit younger. . . . But there, what would your wife say if she heard me talking like this. . . . That's how she is.

Always trying to say the right thing; nearly always failing.

She's one of those persons who excite your wonder.

You wonder if she's serious, you wonder if about everything she says isn't superficial.

She pretends to be well read, to have broad intelligence about any matter that might be under discussion.

She has social aspirations. She caters to people who have family backing, wealth or social prominence.

Three days after my chance meeting with Mrs. Metcalf I met her again, at a party held by some mutual friends.

The party was given in honor of one Miguel Rosalia de Villareal. Miguel, I learned, was a descendant of Spanish nobility, a cousin of a one-time president of Mexico, a son of a wealthy Mexican rancher.

In fact, Miguel was quite a guy. He was tall and dark and slender and intelligent looking.

It wasn't surprising to find, upon being introduced to Miguel, that Mrs. Emily Metcalf had already had that honor and that she had claimed him for the evening. (Mrs. Metcalf, it must be explained, is a widow of five years standing.)

But it was genuinely surprising when toward the end of the evening I discovered that Miguel had not succeeded in ridding himself of the gushy Emily.

In fact, he seemed quite attentive to her, quite pleased with her company.

This was puzzling, as the Mex looked to me like a pretty bright chap.

Miguel remained in Newton for a period of two months. And during that time he was a frequent caller at the home of Mrs. Emily Metcalf. But never again did he appear with her in public.

For a time the thing was a mystery, for Miguel was honored during his brief visit to our city at dozens of public functions, and still more private affairs.

Yet, somehow, Mrs. Metcalf was never included in the private affairs and seemed unaware of the public events until after they were over.

The mystery remained a mystery until the very day of Miguel's departure. And then it was explained only to my satisfaction.

However, I will set down here the happenings as they occurred up to the date of Miguel's departure.

On the day following that first party at which Mrs. Metcalf had been presented to the descendant of Spanish nobility, Miguel was seen to approach the door of Mrs. Metcalf's home. He was admitted by the lady herself.

Five minutes later he departed.

Ten minutes after that, Mrs. Metcalf scurried across the street to Mrs. Hodgson's house, her face fairly beaming with excitement.

"Whatever do you suppose has happened? Imagine!"

Mrs. Hodgson compressed her lips. "I can't guess. What?"

"Miguel, the dear boy, has given me a present!"

"A present? What kind of a present?"

"A lizard!"

Mrs. Hodgson blinked her eyes. "A lizard?"

Emily nodded.

"Isn't it just too thrilling? He says it's a very rare lizard which he brought up from Mexico. He says if I take good care of it, it will do strange things."

Two days later Miguel again called on Mrs. Metcalf, and after his departure the widow flew across the street to Mrs. Hodgson's.

"Imagine what has happened! Just imagine!"

"I can't," said Mrs. Hodgson. "What?"

"It's the lizard. He's twice as big as he was yesterday. Think of it! Twice as big in a day's time!"

Mrs. Hodgson was as perplexed as the rest of us about this lizard business, but she reported faithfully all that happened.

Miguel called on Mrs. Metcalf on an average of once every two days.

Twice she saw him approach the house after dark when Mrs. Metcalf was away, hence we were reasonably sure that none of his visits were prearranged.

And each day Mrs. Metcalf came across the street to report the tremendous strides in the growth of her lizard.

Twice Mrs. Hodgson went over to look at the strange beast.

On the last occasion she fled in mortal terror. For the lizard had grown, in two weeks' time, into a full-sized crocodile, and was chained up in a pen in Mrs. Metcalf's cellar.

Mrs. Metcalf's delight was something to wonder at.

"And to think," she'd say, "only two weeks ago he was a little bit of a fellow that you could hold in the palm of your hand."

It was all very puzzling.

We didn't know whether the woman had gone insane or not.

But facts were facts. There was a lizard. Mrs. Hodgson had seen it. And Miguel didn't deny that he was the donor. But, on the other hand, lizards don't grow into man-eating crocodiles in two weeks' time.

We agreed it was a very rare species.

Suddenly a change came over Mrs. Metcalf.

For more than a week Mrs. Hodgson saw nothing of her, although Miguel was seen making his usual calls at the house.

After two more days had passed, Mrs. Hodgson decided to run over and see if things were all right. It was, I am inclined to believe, curiosity as much as concern, that prompted the act.

Mrs. Hodgson found Emily in a state of utter despair. There were deep rings under her eyes, a haggard look about her face. Questioned, she replied it was the lizard. Mrs. Hodgson was aghast.

"The lizard? What's happened to the lizard?"

"He's growing smaller. Every day he reduces in size, quite as fast as he increased."

Mrs. Hodgson became alarmed. She wondered whether or not it were best to summon a doctor.

But upon being shown the lizard she was forced to agree that its size had shrunk. It was no longer a crocodile. In fact, it was nothing more than a fair-sized lizard.

Thereafter Mrs. Hodgson made daily trips across the street. And each day she reported that the lizard was growing smaller and smaller.

It was truly a remarkable thing.

It was alarming, too, because with each passing day Emily became more haggard looking. She had lost her gushy and cooing ways. She grew morose and taciturn.

And then, one day Mrs. Hodgson came over and discovered Emily on the floor in a dead faint. Quite concerned with the widow's plight, Mrs. Hodgson did what she could and at last revived the victim.

Immediately upon regaining consciousness, Emily burst into a fit of weeping.

After considerable questioning she announced that the lizard had become so small as to be scarcely discernible, and then had vanished altogether. She admitted, also, that Miguel was angry and had said he would not come to see her any more.

Miguel remained in town two weeks longer. He had become tremendously popular and was discovered to be quite a fun-loving and social sort of person.

On the last day of his stay I dropped in at his apartment to say farewell and was surprised to find the place filled with a number of boxes in sizes varying from one an inch square to another ten feet high. Miguel was industriously pounding slats over the top of the largest.

He grinned at me and winked.

"I've been so darned busy it's just now I've found time to send these things back."

"What things?" I asked.

He beckoned to me and I looked in one of the boxes. At sight of a great crocodile reposing inside I drew away in some alarm.

Miguel and I stared at each other for some time. Finally he said: "Down in Mexico we go to great extents to have our fun."

He grinned, and I extended my hand. "Friend," I said, "come visit us again."

Jiu-Jitsu Rough Sport

The jiu-jitsu bout of Japan is the roughest two-man sport. All kinds of fouls are permitted and broken necks and ankles, dislocated hips and shoulders and torn tendons are not uncommon. When a combatant is in a painful grip and about to receive a disabling injury, he is supposed to give in and end the round. Rather than face this humiliation, however, he sometimes allows himself to be punished to the point of insensibility.—Collier's Weekly.

A Well of Grease

For a number of years a freak oil well near Lamar, Okla., has produced grease at an average rate of 350 barrels daily. It is thought to be the only well of its kind in the world and has made its owner a fortune. The well is 3,170 feet deep. All other wells drilled in the neighborhood have turned out to be "dusters." When it reaches the surface the grease is a dark green, but turns to a brilliant golden yellow when struck by outside air.

Cause of Rain and Snow

All the rain and snow that falls is present in the atmosphere because the heat of the sun, plus the lower heat of the earth, causes water to evaporate and turn from its liquid form into water vapor. Anything which lowers the temperature cuts down this rate of evaporation. Thus in winter the moisture content of the air is generally less than in the summer as measured by the humidity.

Plaid for Style-Wise College Girl

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

PLAIDS to the right, plaids to the left, plaids everywhere in the autumn style pageant, did one ever see so many plaids as are flaunting their gay colors and bold patterings throughout fashion's realm this season? Plaids in alluring lightweight woollens, in smart rayon weaves, stunning taffeta plaids and knitted plaids, too, they are all among "those present" in the early fall collections with very special emphasis given them in the much-featured showings of campus fashions.

Evidently, according to the fall style program, the college girl is supposed to dine, to dance, to play golf and tennis, to motor, to study and even to sleep in plaids. Not fiction but fact, this about sleeping in plaids, for one of the smartest items to enroll in a college wardrobe is a sleeping and lounging pajama outfit of gay plaid. The most practical are made of smart cotton prints which are styled with cunningly designed tunics which are made delightfully feminine, with such dainty details as collar and cuffs of scalloped white organdie piped with the plaid, together with a wide sash of the plaid material which ties gypsy fashion in a big romantic bow at one side.

A leading question put up to the college girl is as to whether she will have her frock, suit or ensemble of all-plaid "alone by itself" or shall it be partly of plaid and partly of a weave in solid color. Either or both is the answer, for the advance showings present as convincing arguments in favor of one as the other. An outstanding fashion is the dress which is tailored of all-plaid with not a frill or furberlow to mar its sophisticated simplicity. You see the idea illustrated to the right in the picture. The girl seated is also wearing a frock of this type, in brown and light beige, made in shirtwaist fashion. The buttons are of brown braided leather.

The plaid for the dress on the standing figure to the right is in red, white and blue and it is one of those fashionable thin woolen weaves which is delightfully lightweight and therefore pleasing to wear in the classroom. A bright blue belt and scarf enter attractively into the color scheme. As a matter of fact the two-piece dress tailored of plaid is not only a college girl favorite, for whether you go to school, to office or saunter about town during the shopping hours a plaid frock's the thing this season which interprets chic at its smartest.

Tremendously clever things are being done with plaid plus plain. Such as the topping of a black velvet skirt with a striking plaid jacket such as is shown in the foreground of the group. The plaid wool jacket is in black, green and white with black calf belt. The modish beret is of green duvetyne and of course, in answer to the demand of present-day millinery fashion, it needs must sport a dashing little feather. The blouse, which you cannot see in the picture, is of matching green duvetyne. An ascot scarf of black velvet adds the finishing touch to this ensemble.

In the charming autumn costume pictured to the left above the order is reversed in that the skirt is plaid and the jacket is in the solid color. Here a dark brown cut-velvet jacket surmounts a skirt in plaided brown, green and beige. The turtle-neck blouse is of green jersey. The color combination for this costume is noteworthy since it is typical of the newest trends. There is a disposition on the part of designers to combine any number of rich autumn colors working out effects which favor of the picturesque Alpine costumes even to the soft felt hats with their audacious little quills and feathers.

And have you seen the perfectly stunning velvet and corduroy prints done in bold plaids and checks? No college girl once glimpsing them, will not be able to resist this temptation. © Western Newspaper Union.

AUTUMN CHIC

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

The new tweeds are simply stunning both as to color and novelty in texture and weave. The latest suit models styled of tweed have both a jacket and a long topcoat. Unless you have already proved it to your own satisfaction you have no idea how really useful and practical these three-piece suits are. The model pictured is in a very swaggy-looking brown, beige and red checked tweed. The long manish topcoat can be worn as a separate fall wrap. The square patch pockets on the jacket are distinctive.

"BUTCHER BOY BACK" IS MUCH IN FAVOR

Possibly you have never thought of your butcher as a very stylish person. Now we have Mainbocher's "the butcher boy back." It's a loose back gathered from a shallow shoulder yoke. The front of this jacket or tunic, whichever it happens to be, is belted. Belted front and unbelted backs are regarded with favor by all who have seen this new arrangement. It adds an extra fillip to the two-piece costume, which is, as you know, one of the season's latest pets. Since so many women find difficulty in wearing belted coats, the partially belted idea is a life saver.

Tunics have a long way to go before they catch up to their reputation. We've been hearing about tunics consistently, but that's as far as one can truthfully say the idea has gone. With the two-piece idea having the endorsement of the haute couture, there is every reason to see the tunic coming in vogue at last.

Collars This Fall to Be Worn Close to the Throat

Fall collars are something to watch. Most of them snug fairly close to the throat, big pilgrim collars, high roll collars and wide revers all being seen. Sleeves on the straighter coats are often large at the top, while those on the looser, shorter designs generally display fullness near the wrist. Belts are in again, since coats are lapping well in front, and many a late mid-season model is snugged about the figure by a narrow belt hardly an inch wide.

Hosiery Shades

Hosiery colors that will be most important for street wear this fall are dusky browns, taupe tones, smoke and gunmetal shades. For formal evening wear either skin tones or very dark shades in gossamer sheer will be worn.

SYNOPSIS

On her way to a faculty position in Lostland Academy, Janet Mercer meets Prof. Arthur Fleming, also on his way to the Academy. At the school they are struck by an air of mystery pervading the place. Gordon Haskell, proprietor, welcomes them. Wilton Payne completes the Academy faculty. In a schoolroom Janet finds a group which the teachers had supposed were scholars, are wax figures. Haskell explains unusual circumstances connected with the conduct of the Academy. Among the pupils is Berenice Bracebridge, daughter of the late owner of the school. The story of the tragedy of Lostland Academy is that of two sisters and two brothers of Berenice, who lost their lives in the water, at the same moment, some years ago. The wax figures were modeled in the likenesses of the four children, and Doctor Bracebridge's will provided that they must be preserved. Payne learns from Berenice that the uncouth giant whom Janet had seen with Haskell is named Balder, and is a valuable servant. From an old farmer, Jerry Moore, the only witness of the drowning of the children, Payne learns particulars of the tragedy. He begins to take an increasing interest in Berenice, as Fleming does in Janet. Reading diaries kept by the late Dr. Jethro Bracebridge, Payne senses something sinister in the drowning of the children.

CHAPTER V—Continued

It was nearly dawn when he concluded his examinations of the diaries, which, on the whole, had yielded little meat for his theories to feed on. Doctor Bracebridge evidently had been a gentle, affectionate father, not too forcible in his management of a quartette of high-spirited young people resentful of a newcomer, who had, doubtless, assumed too easily that they were under his authority.

When he knew Berenice better he might some day ask her about the will. But he shrank from an undue and perhaps to her mind an unjustifiable curiosity. And he did not wish to fasten in her mind any suspicion of which her guardian was the object.

Berenice was as beautiful as an angel, he thought, tired with the approach of dawn, too tired to think of rare smiles and new terms.

"Oh, I am too tired to sleep. I think I'll steal a march on Arthur and go down to that old church."

It was glorious, faring down on this last day of September, with the red maples coming up like grenadiers from the valley under vast volleys of sunrise; and the academy a black-purple cloud on the hill behind him. The country roads were firm and cold under his feet. The red bright sunlight was on the walls of the deserted village as he reached it, and he noticed white chrysanthemums in what had once been a garden lying fresh and cool along the matted, sparkling grass.

He entered the church, and was soon on the belfry stairs, which creaked and groaned beneath his weight. When he reached the landing he looked along all the exposed rafters for a key. But no key could he find.

Descending the church again, he found a key sticking in the keyhole of an old closet in the vestry, and went up the belfry stairs again to try it on the locked door. It fitted snugly, and though it turned the lock with difficulty, it served the purpose. He found himself in a room with four windows facing to the four points of the compass; and absolutely nothing in the place but an old Christmas tree still nailed to its square base of green painted wood. Nearly all its branches had been stripped or torn from it; but enough were left to indicate its character with the aid of a few bits of tinsel, of festive silver and gold. A Christmas tag was still dangling from one of the branches, with a name written on it. He examined it more closely. The name was "Althea Bracebridge." He mused over this poor little memorial some moments—a pathetic signpost pointing back to some long-ago Christmas celebration in this church. But why had the tree been carried up and stored away in the belfry room—instead of thrown out of doors? Perhaps the boys got hold of it and carried it up here to form a part of their endless ingenuities; I think I'll take the card. Berenice might be glad to have it.

He untied it carefully. He was about to put it in his pocket when he saw that on the back of it was the date of the celebration of which this was perhaps, the old memorial. Calculating back, he made it precisely the Christmas before the accident. "But this church must have been deserted then," he thought. "Maybe they reopened it for a Christmas celebration. To what had this little card been attached? A book? A bottle of perfume? A box of candy? And had Althea liked her present?"

"But this church must have been deserted then," he thought. "Maybe they reopened it for a Christmas celebration. To what had this little card been attached? A book? A bottle of perfume? A box of candy? And had Althea liked her present?"

He tried to picture the scene—the old church with the pale winter sunshine streaming in and some one in the choir singing, "Hark, the Herald Angels!"; and the youngsters excited over their gifts and impatient for the exercises to end. And had Berenice been there? As usual when he thought of her, horizons began to open and the sky to clear. "Mrs. Denver—bless her!—told her to marry. But what of poor me; with so little yet laid up 'or a wife'?"

He unlocked the door and replaced the key in the vestry. Janet was strolling in the grounds of the academy when he re-entered them, and waved to him in her usual friendly way, making no comment when he joined her on his early excursions.

"I think we did very well last night," she observed; "we really took Berenice's mind from the anniversary."

"The trouble is—there's a perpetual anniversary in that old academy as long as those wax figures are there."

"They're haunting—queer, uncanny things—like something living on long after its time. Sometimes this place seems like a dream to me. Yet it has an odd charm, too—those wakings in the quiet morning light—that solemn hall with the pictures of the old presidents; a principal so fond of flowers that he keeps his hyacinth bulbs always blooming. Wasn't that a gorgeous purple hyacinth on the breakfast table yesterday?"

"Yes. You're right, it has charm—how glowing red the old bricks are!" "Everything glitters today. See Berenice's hair in the sun—it's like flame."

They both looked towards her as she came lightly down the path, calling to them, pulling her fluffy white wrap around her.

"A great day for our walk," she saluted them. "You are out early."

"I went to the church."

"What did you find there?"

"I'll tell you later—it's quite a story."

He did not think it the time to show her the card, particularly as he saw Haskell and Balder emerging from the greenish shadow of the basement. Both looked towards the group; then, exchanging some words, separated. Haskell approached Berenice with self-consciousness always in his manner; as if he must be perpetually on guard—warding away even friendliness and pleasant words.

"You are walking again today?"

"Yes! Will you join us?"

"Why should I walk over these hills?"

"Will you go up the ravine with us?"

"You know I never go up the ravine. It is too exhausting. However, it must be beautiful up there now, with the scarlet maples."

"Yes, they're blood red," Wilton said. "I've never seen such intensity of red."

Haskell put his hands over his eyes. "This sun fills my eyes with red."

That afternoon the four were stepping together over the hills; their happiness singularly like that of creatures let out of cages. The sun was striking out wonders of blue vapor of dazzling color from rough heights and greener lowlands. Wilton told her of reading the diary.

"How long did your stepmother live after the deaths of your brothers and sisters?"

"Fully eight years, I think; I'm not sure. She was a blessed woman; always kind to me. Even my brothers and sisters liked her, though they didn't like—" She broke off. "Oh, well, it's all past and gone."

"May I ask you if you can remember when the old church down there was last used?"

"Long before I was born—about 1880, I think."

"And was it ever opened for Christmas celebrations—after that?"

"Oh, no!"

"Are you sure?"

"Quite sure! But father used to have celebrations for the neighbors' children in the old academy, and they all received presents from the tree. I only faintly remember the last one ever held—the Christmas before the accident. It was very gay. We had a beautiful tree."

"That tree is still in existence."

She looked at him incredulously, her eyes half fearful. "How do you know that?"

"I went to the belfry room this morning; found a key that fitted the door. The room was absolutely bare except for an ancient tree on its wooden base, painted green, as usual. Bits of tinsel still clung to the dry branches, and this little card was tied to one of them with a red ribbon. Can you read the writing? The ink is very pale."

"Althea! How strange. Why, I have a card just like it, saved all these years. How on earth did that tree get up there?"

TO BE CONTINUED.

COLMA MEETING ON SCHOOL BONDS

Italian, so that, through his talk, they might develop a more enlightened understanding of the matter.

Mr. Andriano, in a comprehensive manner, brought out the salient points regarding this vital issue. He stressed the importance of adopting the proposed bond issue, so as to assure the construction of new schools for the children of the district at this time, when a saving of almost one-third in their cost could be made. He said the first consideration of the electors should always be, in such matters, the welfare and comfort of our growing children. He made an eloquent plea for the passage of the bonds by an overwhelming majority.

William J. Sweeney, member of the Board of School Trustees then introduced Mr. Roy W. Cloud, formerly for many years superintendent of schools of San Mateo County.

Mr. Cloud, in a forceful manner, brought to the attention of his hearers the great need for new schools for the children of the elementary grades in the district. He termed the three school buildings to be replaced as a menace to the health and welfare of the pupils attending. He said the well being of the children demanded the securing of new structures in place of the present Jefferson, Vista Grande and Crocker school buildings.

Having had much experience in school matters, Mr. Cloud said he felt himself qualified to advocate a favorable ballot by the residents of the district on the bond issue and expressed the hope that the proposition would be adopted by a decisive majority.

Mr. Augustin then introduced Mr. Andrew J. Chesney, assistant chief of the Daly City Fire Department. The speaker said he was a builder by profession and, as a fireman of many years experience, was competent to speak of the fire hazards in the old school buildings. He commended the teachers of the various schools for the efficiency of their fire drills, but said these were insufficient to overcome the menace of the inflammable nature of the old structures. He strongly advocated putting the bonds over, so as to secure safety and comfort of our children in their studies.

Mayor H. H. Smith was then called upon, and responded with a stirring appeal to the voters for the adoption of the bond issue. He said that the schools of any community were of paramount importance to every member of any district, and felt that all should make every possible effort to have every one go to the polls and vote favorably on the proposition.

Mr. Smith said he was sorry that he could not be in attendance at the mass meeting in Daly City on next Wednesday evening, owing to absence from the city, but assured his hearers he would do all in his power to advance the matter of adoption of the bond issue on October 5.

Councilman Paul Selmi was introduced, and made an eloquent plea for adoption of the bond issue and urged every voter to come out and cast a favorable ballot.

Mr. R. L. Crane, superintendent of elementary schools for the district, then answered questions regarding the construction and location of the proposed new schools.

Chairman Augustin then thanked those who spoke, and also the editor of The Record for his ardent efforts in behalf of the bonds, and also the Community Welfare Association of Daly City, who made possible the securing of the meeting hall for this meeting by making a donation to pay for the rent thereof.

Great enthusiasm was shown by the audience, and the speakers all were frequently and vociferously applauded for their remarks.

The wish was expressed on all sides that the bond issue would be adopted and the three new school buildings constructed without delay.

The bond issue will be for a total sum of $80,000.

The amount to be received from the government will be $105,000, but only $80,000, to bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, will be repaid by the district, the balance of approximately $25,000 being an outright gift to the district from the government for the consideration of erecting new schools.

Another mass meeting for the bonds will be held next Wednesday evening, September 26, at 8 o'clock at the City Hall in Daly City. Miss Pansy Jewett Abbott, Superintendent of Schools of San Mateo County, and other prominent citizens will speak at this meeting.

MIGHT TRY DECAPITATING

A certain African tribe discourages long winded speeches by requiring all orators to stand on one foot while sounding off. A fine idea, but a better one would be to compel them to stand on their heads.

ANNUAL PICNIC GREAT SUCCESS

there was less discord and dissension, and more co-operation among the various groups and factions; less thought for personal and selfish interests, and more consideration for the people as a whole. Daly City has the general good and advancement of nearly ten thousand population. A city of this size, adjoining the commercial and financial center of the west, should be up to date in every particular. It should have better school buildings for the comfort and education of the children; improved fire department; improved streets, especially Mission and San Jose avenue; and many other things might be done by and with the earnest co-operation of all the people.

No group of citizens is more powerful or better situated to cultivate home interests in business and social affairs, and to spread the doctrine of good will, than the merchants, business and professional men of a town or city. They come in close contact with the people day by day. They are interested to increase their business, and in so doing should promote the interests of their customers. Competition is keen, but competition is the life of trade. On the other hand, the people should remember that they can help Daly City by patronizing those who live and have their interests in the town; who keep the money here to be reinvested again here; not those who take the money out of the community to be spent elsewhere. Such money is gone forever.

The membership of the Daly City Merchants' Association is about one hundred, of which only a small proportion attend the meetings. This does not show the proper spirit of co-operation. The association exists primarily for the benefit of the merchants. It is their organization, and it has been fostered and kept alive by its officers and certain active members who take enough interest in its affairs to attend the meetings. That this organization is capable of performing a great public service, and also of serving the private interests of its members, no one seems to doubt or question. Let us hope that in the future more active interest will be shown by the merchants themselves, and that this power for good for them during their study periods. In addition to the necessity from a student standpoint, is the consideration that the work of erection of these schools will give employment to an appreciable number of Jefferson District and Daly City residents for a considerable length of time at remunerative wages.

Every public spirited citizen who is eligible to vote should cast a ballot in favor of the school bonds.

You can hear this issue clearly explained by prominent speakers at the mass meeting to be held at the Daly City Auditorium next Wednesday evening, September 26.

Passing of Infant

Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Dhyvetter of 1359 Fifth avenue are receiving condolences of friends on the death of their infant son.

The baby was born September 16 in St. Mary's Hospital and passed away on the morning of September 17. The funeral was conducted from Lasswell & Co.'s.

The father, Maurice Dhyvetter, formerly resided in Daly City on Brunswick street prior to his marriage, some time ago.

Boy Scouts Swim

Scoutmaster Edward Bradford of Shakespeare street, accompanied by his troop of 40 Boy Scouts from Daly City, visited Sutro Baths, Tuesday evening.

The boys had a great time in the water and their scoutmaster deserves a great deal of credit for the way in which the boys conduct themselves under the careful guidance of their scoutmaster, who is very popular with his troop.

JEFFERSON UNION HIGH SCHOOL HAS REGISTER MEET

(By F. M. B.)

Registration at the Parent-Teacher meeting held Tuesday evening in the Little Theater of our local High School showed an attendance of forty-five.

After the usual opening procedure, Mr. James Ferguson principal, welcomed on behalf of the school, the parents of new students, as this meeting had been planned in their honor.

Mrs. Bentley, president, in extending the welcome of the unit, explained the objects of a High School P. T. A. and the benefits of membership therein. In quoting Mrs. Mary L. Langworthy, president of the National Congress, she said, "The Parent Teacher Association in secondary schools is more necessary than in the elementary and unless the same thoughtful care is devoted to the adolescent, a great loss in progress is inevitable as he goes on to college or into the business of earning a living."

The years program, as outlined, was presented by the chairman, Mrs. Prestidge, and adopted by the unit. The proposed erection of three new grammar school buildings was presented in a brief, concise manner by Mr. Augustin, of the elementary school board.

Following his talk, the unit voted to endorse the bond issue.

Announcement was made of the regional conference P. T. A. to be held in the auditorium of Jefferson Union High School on Wednesday evening, October 3. Members were urged to remember the date of this event, as a splendid program is being planned.

Following an interval of community singing, the guest speaker, Mr. Merritt Brady, Americanization chairman of Eighth District, American Legion, was introduced. Mr. Brady brought a fine message and caused his hearers to realize anew the privileges of American citizenship.

On adjournment, parents and teachers met in the domestic science room, where they were served home made cake and coffee. The social hour was marked by an atmosphere of really good fellowship. Ten-thirty found all home again with the feeling of having spent a pleasant and profitable evening.

rites on Sunday at JEWISH CEMETERY

The ceremony of laying the cornerstone for the "Portals of Eternity," the first Jewish mausoleum to be built in northern California, took place at 2:30 o'clock last Sunday afternoon in the Hills of Eternity Cemetery at Lawndale.

The structure is being erected by Congregation Sherith Israel of San Francisco and will cost a sum in excess of $750,000.

Public officials and other civic leaders of San Francisco participated in the services.

Mayor Angelo J. Rossi and Rabbi Morris Goldstein were the principal speakers for the occasion. Cantor Rubin R. Rinder of Temple Emanuel gave the invocation. Isadore M. Shemanski, vice president of Temple Sherith Israel, of San Francisco, had charge of placing the cornerstone. A musical program was rendered.
